A Note from Dr. Hala

Dear reader,

You do not need a weekend getaway to reconnect with your partner. You need five minutes of intentional presence. Most couples I work with are not falling apart because of big betrayals. They are drifting apart because of small neglects: the phone at dinner, the autopilot goodnight, the months without a real conversation about something other than logistics.

This activity kit gives you 10 rituals you can weave into your ordinary days. No babysitter required. No reservation needed. Just two people choosing, again and again, to turn toward each other.

With warmth, Dr. Hala Ali Certified Family Counselor

Section 1: Morning Rituals (5 minutes)

Ritual 1: The 6-Second Kiss

Research by Dr. John Gottman shows that a six-second kiss is long enough to create a moment of genuine connection. It sounds simple. It is. That is the point.

How to practice: Before you leave for the day, stop. Put down your phone, your bag, your keys. Look at your partner. Kiss them for a full six seconds. No talking. No rushing.

Why it works: Six seconds is long enough to shift your nervous system out of "task mode" and into "connection mode." It signals: you are more important than my to-do list.

Ritual 2: The Gratitude Text

At some point during your day, send your partner a text that answers one question: "What is one thing about you I noticed and appreciated recently?"

Not "thanks for doing the dishes." Something deeper: "I noticed how patient you were with your mother on the phone yesterday. That kindness is one of the reasons I fell in love with you."

Section 2: Evening Rituals (10-15 minutes)

Ritual 3: The High-Low-Close

At dinner or before bed, each partner shares:

- High: The best part of your day
- Low: The hardest part of your day
- Close: One moment today when you felt close to your partner (or wished you had)

Rules: No advice-giving during this exercise. Just listening and reflecting back: "That sounds like it was really hard" or "I am glad that happened for you."

Ritual 4: The Phone Stack

During dinner, both phones go face-down in a stack. First person to check their phone does the dishes. (Or whatever consequence feels fair and fun.)

Why it works: It is not about the phone. It is about the signal: right now, nothing is more important than this conversation.

Ritual 5: The Two-Minute Debrief

When you reunite at the end of the day, pause for two minutes before diving into logistics. Ask: "How are you, really?" Then wait for the actual answer, not the reflexive "fine."

Section 3: Weekly Rituals (30-60 minutes)

Ritual 6: The Question Jar

Write 20 questions on slips of paper and put them in a jar. Once a week, pull one and discuss it together. No phones. No distractions.

Starter questions:

- What is something you have been afraid to tell me?
- When did you last feel truly proud of us?
- What is one thing I do that makes you feel most loved?
- If we could relive one day from our relationship, which would you choose?
- What is something you want to try together in the next year?
- What does safety feel like to you in our relationship?

Ritual 7: The Parallel Activity

Sit in the same room doing different things. Reading. Drawing. Working on a puzzle. No conversation required. The goal is comfortable co-existence, the feeling of "I do not need to perform for you. I can just be."

Research calls this "alone together" and it is a powerful indicator of relationship security.

Section 4: Monthly Rituals

Ritual 8: The State of Us

Once a month, have a 30-minute conversation about your relationship. Not about problems. About the relationship itself.

Template:

- "Something I love about us right now is..."
- "Something I want more of is..."
- "Something I want to thank you for is..."
- "Something I am working on for us is..."

Ritual 9: The Surprise Gesture

Once a month, do something for your partner that they did not ask for and did not expect. It does not need to be big. A note in their bag. Their favorite snack. Running their errand so they can rest.

The key: It should reflect that you have been paying attention. Generic gifts say "I love you." Specific gestures say "I see you."

Ritual 10: The Memory Walk

Once a month, revisit a place that matters to your relationship. The restaurant where you had your first date. The park where you had that conversation. The hospital where your child was born.

Walk through it together. Talk about what you remember. Let the geography of your love story remind you of the journey you have been on together.

Section 5: Tracking Your Reconnection

Use this simple weekly tracker:

Day	Ritual Practiced	How It Felt (1-5)	Notes
Mon
Tue
Wed
Thu
Fri
Sat
Sun

Goal: Practice at least 3 rituals per week. Not because you have to, but because you want to see what happens when you do.

Your Next Step

Pick one ritual. Just one. Try it tonight. Do not announce it. Do not make it a project. Just do it and notice what shifts between you. Connection is not a destination. It is a daily practice, and you have already started.
